- Psychology of various sexual love including lust murder -

Is the trigger a guilty feeling or good and evil addiction towards sex? Is it an abuse or misunderstanding of love? Is it an escape from the unpleasant reality? Or fear against the invisibles?

Whatever the reason is, there are people who have closed their minds to the reality regarding sexual love and playing in their fantasy worlds.

The fantasy world in one's mind closed from the reality; it is free and safe but vain, boring and has no reality. Of course it is! What exist there are only imaginations.

Therefore, if one imagines like this,

he ends up feeling empty.

In such a case, seeking a stimulation to forget the emptiness, it is very natural to have a different imagination.

However, the span of the stimulation is short. Soon the one will feel vain.

In such a case, wishing to delete the emptiness, it is also natural to believe that a mere imagination was real.

However, an imagination is an imagination after all. Soon the one will feel vain.

In such a case, hoping to raise the sense of reality of the imagination, it is also natural to mix a part of the reality with the imagination.

Though the reality to be intertwined must be limited within the range that does not disturb the imagination.

But no matter how much one mixes the reality with its imagination, the imagination is an imagination after all.

The one feels empty soon.

Fetishism

Therefore, seeking a stimulation to forget the emptiness, the one may have a different imagination. Hoping to raise the sense of reality of the imagination, it may also mix a part of the reality with the imagination and try to believe that everything is real.

By the way, the object does not speak; therefore there is no risk to destroy one's precious imagination.

But after all, it ends up in vain.

Therefore, seeking a stimulation to forget the emptiness, the one may have a different imagination. Hoping to raise the sense of reality of the imagination, it may also mix a part of the reality with the imagination and try to believe that everything is real.

*By the way, in the case the one carries out its imagination, the sense of reality may temporarily be raised, if it can make a real partner frightened by violence and cooperated.

*The misunderstanding of love "love is something to be ordered" and a certain belief like "a woman must follow a man" may also raise the sense of reality of the imagination.

But after all, it ends up in vain.

But after all, it ends up in vain.

Though one may have any kind of sexual relations with anyone in the world of its mind that is closed from the real world,
